To Whom It May Concern,

It is with great pleasure and confidence that I write this letter to recommend Wisdom Balicholo, a remarkable young professional who recently represented Zimbabwe at the 2025 JCI Africa and the Middle East Conference (AMEC) in Durban as one of the finalists in the Creative Young Entrepreneur (CYE) program.

As the President of JCI Zimbabwe, I had the privilege of witnessing Wisdom's growth, leadership, and resilience throughout this competitive process. Out of dozens of brilliant applicants nationwide, he emerged as one of the top representatives — a clear testament to his entrepreneurial spirit, innovative mindset, and commitment to creating solutions that matter.

Wisdom's business idea, AccessPal, tackles accessibility challenges through technology, particularly for the visually impaired and underrepresented language communities. His pitch was not only technically sound, but deeply human-centered — something that impressed both judges and fellow delegates from across Africa and the Middle East. Beyond his performance at the conference, Wisdom demonstrated strong communication, a willingness to learn, and outstanding professionalism under pressure.

I have no doubt that Wisdom has a promising future in the fields of technology, software development, and AI innovation. His ambition to gain international exposure, collaborate with global experts, and continue developing impactful tech products is both sincere and achievable. He has expressed a strong desire to learn even without compensation and I believe that with the right mentorship and platform, he will flourish.

If you are considering Wisdom for a position, internship, or further opportunity, I offer my highest recommendation. He is a humble, hardworking, and purpose-driven individual who deserves every chance to grow and contribute on the global stage.

Please do not hesitate to contact me should you require any further information.

Yours Sincerely

Daniel Chakacha
